

.....SIMPLE OVER VIEW....

1. Most religions are now easy with the thought that we humans evolved from all other life on earth, specifically from the animal kingdom, and even more specifically from our closest animal forefather, the two-legged ape.
And that's an awful long journey, a billion plus years if you take it from the time the earth got oxygen, bacteria, and seaweed. But whatever life was, and whenever it arrived, the most important thing to know is that all of life, from the start, was subject to "The Laws of Creation". Every living thing had to compete with every other living thing and the environment in order to survive. Each individual living thing of each and every generation of each and every species had to use all the energies and abilities nature had given it in order to win the game of his life and survive. This meant that only the winners survived, which in turn ensured "the survival of the fittest" which meant that each and every surviving species was an improvement on what that species was before.
2. And the supreme winner out of all the millions of different species on earth, after competing over a billion years, is you and me, the human being. We needed a bit of luck. Very, very recently, in ecological terms, Nature gave us, and no other species, a rational thinking brain. Which allowed us to 'rationalise' all our old animal survival instincts of greed, aggression, lust and fear. Bingo. From being an ordinary and happy member of the well-balanced animal kingdom, we have suddenly become the most proficient exploiter of all life on earth. We are now firmly up in our Ivory Tower looking down on the rest of nature, 70% of which we have already destroyed or made extinct.
3. Getting up into that ivory tower didn't happen that quickly. Even 300 hundred years ago the values that humans gave themselves were only a little above animal level...the worlds human population was still small, and the tools of industry and warfare were still of the handmade variety. Back then, even if all the armies of all the world battled together and if all the material demands of humans were doubled, nature could easily handle it, because the ratio of nature to humans was still very much in natures favour.
4. A lot has happened in the last 300 years. Today, one human being could press one button which would set off all the other pre-set nuclear missiles around the world and, within a few minutes, bring about a 'nothingness' that is terrifying to think about. If you survived you would find yourself in the cold and the dark, with no lights, power, or water, with looters out on the streets killing people for food....for "might is right" once again. That is the immediate horrific physical scenario we featherbedded humans will wake up to. Let alone the guilt of wiping out billions of years of the patient creation of all the other innocent life on this planet.
5. Sorry to be a prophet of gloom, and a bore, in repeating what everybody knows. But we all still appear to be walking blindfolded along the same path and squabbling about the same things, with politicians putting economic growth and human rights upper most on everyone's agenda. We don't know how lucky we may have been to survive a nuclear war these last 75 years. But that luck may run out. Remember human error is in our DNA....and one mistake of this kind, made by one human when he "loses it", as we all know we can, will end everything.....that is why I am being a bore, and that is why the mouse that wants to roar is asking our world leaders for something, anything, to be done to stop a mistake being made which results in humans killing themselves as well as destroying someone else's earth.
6. Remember.... the body doesn't change.....it wants to play the same winning game to get fulfilment out of life. It is the soul that has to change...for the soul sets the rules of the game.... the equation of the soul has to catch up with the advances of the body.....the goal posts have to be set in a greener position....humans must start giving more and start taking less.... from the top down.....
